RE: Legal Opinion Regarding Site Plan and Restrictive Covenant-33 Alhambra

Date: January 18, 2017

Zeke, such a proffer attached to the land use is permissible under 3-1505(A) of the Zoning Code. Even if not proffered, however, my legal opinion is that no development can occur on the property except in compliance with the site plan and restrictive covenant that is approved (the restrictive covenant will be recorded and runs with the land). If the site plan expires, any development would require renewal or amendment of the site plan. Please note, this approach is consistent with the principle established in section 3-1505(B) of the Zoning Code.

Hi Zeke.

Will your client proffer a restrictive covenant with the land use change that limits development on the parcel to what has been approved in the restrictive covenant? We need to address the concerns about future development of the project if the land use is changed to commercial but the site plan expires or changes to a commercial use.
